This is my first Activator for Windows 8.1 Pro, Premium and Enterprise.. source of the PC. But it's impossible. What I've got is: One GUID Partition Table (GPT) disk with partition "Microsoft Reserved 1" in HDD-0 and partition "Windows" with format "NTFS" in HDD-1. One other disk with partition "Windows" with format "EFI" in HDD-0 and partition "Microsoft Reserved 2" with format "NTFS" in HDD-1. One other disk with partition "Protechnology" with format "FAT32" in HDD-0. One third disk with partition "Windows" with format "FreeBSD" in HDD-0. Any way to activate windows 8 1 with this kind of disks? is it possible? A: First, your disks are not GPT. That drive is FAT32, GPT is a much different format that looks different. Next, the UEFI BIOS (the MOK) tells the PC which partitions to boot from. If you have set the UEFI to boot from either HDD-1 or HDD-0 then you don't need any of the above other partitions. Now you need to install the MOK for Windows from a diskette or ISO image of some kind. You need to boot your PC into UEFI mode and set the MOK to boot from your Windows ISO. When you boot your PC from that ISO, the ISO will install the necessary MOK files and you will have complete control of your system, i.e. it will know to look for Windows and will install it automatically. Note that your drive with the ISO needs to be an EFI partition. If you want to do it from a USB flash drive, you need to format that drive with a FAT32 partition. Here's a great way to make every day a little more like Christmas: Leave a comment on the box of your choice at this site. It'll be like you're saying, "Hey, I'm Santa and these are presents I get to leave under the tree today." [Update: Of course these are not for children! Who would be silly enough to leave presents for a child?! Please feel free to either submit a comment, or link to a review of a game you could let people leave under your tree.] I'm limited to

I've got a few roofing tiles that are slanted to approx 35 degrees: I want to calculate the height of the tiles. Looking at them, it would seem that the angle from the centre to the tile on the left and right are roughly the same, as they are at the same level. But the ones in the middle are much higher than the ones on either side: I have an approximate idea of how to solve it, but I want to calculate the correct height for the tiles - and get it right. I drew a picture to make it easier to understand: The red line represents the highest point of the roof. My idea was to draw a line that connects the two points, and then measure the difference in height. For the central tile, that should be roughly half of the tile length; but for the ones on either side
